We are removing all roof tiles from the existing roof and using the Redland tiles on existing and new extension.

The existing roof tiles are old and damaged and all need changing and are in really bad condition. There are cracks in them too which is why there are many leaks in the home.

So yes these are the tiles we are using for replacing existing and on new extended areas.

Kind regards

Georgio

Hi Georgio,

I note that the roof tiles on the existing dwelling have a flat profile but the roof tile proposed for the extensions has a camber. Their style therefore does not match and this is not acceptable in design terms.

Do you intend on retaining the roof tiles on the existing dwelling or replacing them with the Redland 49 Roof Tile and using this same tile for the extensions? Please clarify.
