Comments	<input type="text" value="My comment was that it does not seem such a bad idea to have houses and apartments within walking distance of rail & bus stations and town centre shops. Provided that car ownership and use could be discouraged. It is reported that fewer young people are acquiring driving licences now than in previous years. It may be that vast sprawling housing developments expanding into open country (think Symondshyde proposals) requiring car journeys for almost everything may come to be looked on as a c20 idea from the past."/>
